

The CollegeAtlas.org A-List ranks U.S. colleges and universities based on Academic Quality as well as Affordability and Accessibility. A-List schools are spread across the country. Schools from other popular college rankings like U.S. News and Forbes are mostly isolated to the East Coast and California (see map below). Did your school make the A-List? CollegeAtlas A-List provides a fresh, unbiased look at the concept of a college ranking list. Instead of highlighting elite, exclusive, expensive schools that cater to the few, it rewards colleges and universities for their ability to deliver the best academic and economic value to students, while admitting a relatively high percentage of applicants. For the first time, there is an unbiased ranking system for the masses.

FORBES & U.S. NEWS

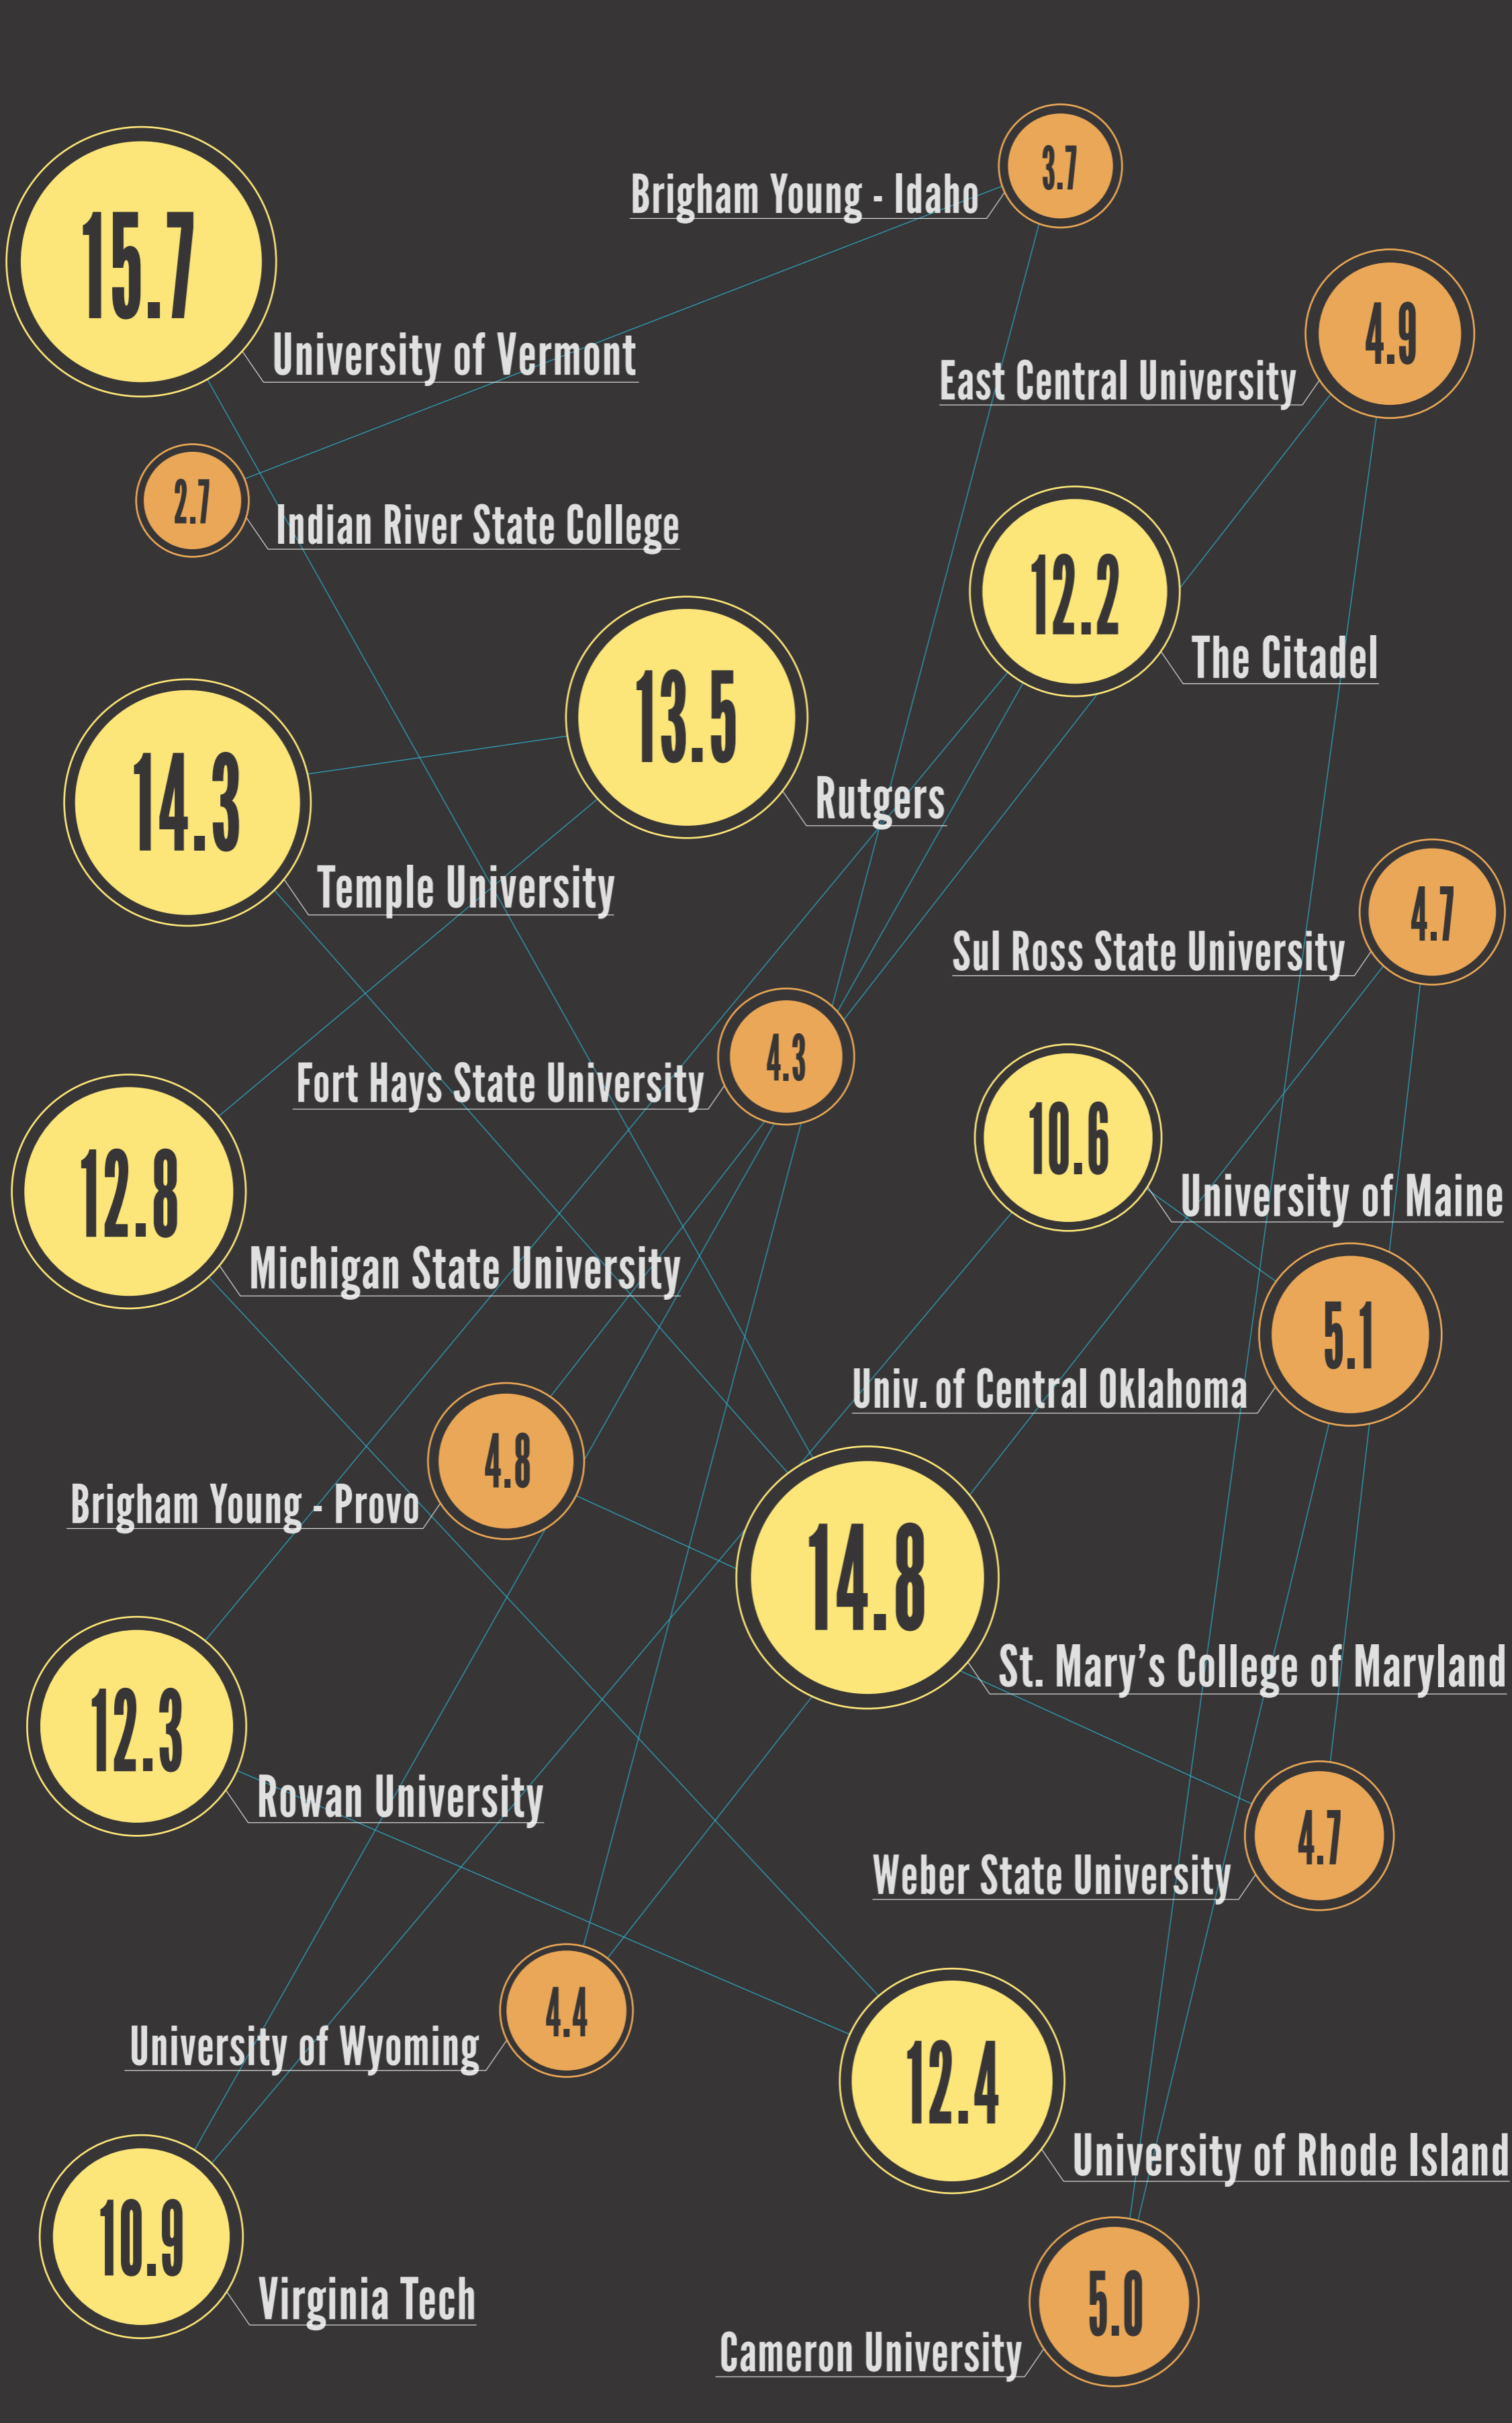

In this economy, traditional college rankings are missing the mark by consistently awarding top rank to universities with high tuition costs and extremely low acceptance rates. It is no secret that the usual top-ranked universities are hard to get into and to afford. They often have acceptance rates below ten percent, are steadily increasing tuition, and are geographically clustered in the northeast and California. The A-List recognizes academically strong colleges that are affordable and accessible.
